Dear Mr. Some time ago, in writing you about the L. atrocity, did you find that my work had been making a sidelight, a history and that I was doing that with this matter at greater length than can be used as a response to a letter? I also told you that because my typing and writing are terrible, I was now typing and that I would have to correct from typed up. However, additional medical problems, and when I am 87, make my typing only more time with this, however, I am not that many corrections and typing is clean.

While what I enclose is rough and need editing, it states fact and I think you people would be well served by what you can learn from it, particularly about accepting government statements as truth, that questions can bring out the flaws in propaganda, especially when it deforms other and corrupts our previous history.

I wish you that you could sight, rethink your position so that the Journal of American History cannot be used for propaganda, so that it can be only factual about our history
